The University of Delhi released its fourth cut-off list on July 8, even as Ambedkar University, Delhi (AUD), issued the first, in which many subjects touched 100%.

In the latter's list for the university's seven social science and humanities programmes, cut-offs touched 100% for commerce students who had applied for sociology, English, psychology and the BA (hons) social sciences. Moreover, the required marks for every course were higher by two-seven per cent for those from outside Delhi. "The cut-offs have been structured keeping in mind that commerce students tend to score more as compared to others," said Sarmishta Roy, PRO, AUD. "Further, several students from boards outside Delhi have scored much higher but we have a mandate to reserve 85% seats for applicants domiciled in Delhi. This leaves 15% for students from other places." A second cut-off list is due on July 13 while DU's fifth cut-off is expected the day after.

In the fourth list, candidates could sign up for history at Hindu, Lady Shri Ram (LSR) College for Women and Indraprastha College for Women. At LSR, there were no more admissions for BCom (H), economics and Hindi. While Shri Ram College for Commerce closed the window for BCom, the economics option was still open. Economics and BCom (H) were available at Hans Raj and Hindu as well. At Delhi College of Arts and Commerce, one could enrol for BCom (H), economics and English.

The door to most science courses was shut everywhere barring some programmes at Daulat Ram, Kirori Mal, Hans Raj and Hindu. Psychology and Hindi were still on offer at Daulat Ram, as were BA French, German, Spanish and Italian programmes at the university's department of Germanic and Romance studies.

St Stephen's College, after completing interviews, declared the list of candidates to be admitted. The Non-Collegiate Women's Education Board released its first cut-off list, with 85% being the highest point for BCom.
