Read the Passage below and answer the questions (1-3) given below:

You are the talk of the town these days, so, you know, I wanted to talk to you. You are a student. You seek to be highly educated, but you turn a blind eye to the academic terrorism that routinely cripples and kills poor students in universities. You never acknowledge the privilege of exclusivity. You strut about with the confidence that you will never slip below the poverty line. You never know the pain of exclusion. You would have never lost your home in a slum demolition drive. On the other hand, you know, with self-assured grace you make up India's fanciful, much-advertised youngistan edge. You flaunt the fact that you are one of the 120 million youth that your country will add to its workforce over the next decade. You forget that this workforce, devoid of any working class consciousness, shall only serve to launch the latest edition of slave trade. Welcome aboard, dude! The Slave Ship is waiting for you. If and when India's economy goes into freefall mode, you will be the first to flounder. Just remember that. You also like to imagine yourself as a sexually restless youngster. Sadly, diktats and death threats make you seek shelter in matrimonial websites with drop-down menus listing 450 sub-castes. You blame this casteism on parental pressure...I write to you because I believe that you could be the stronger one. Some day you will step out of your selfish skin and speak up for the people. Some day you will wage war against every injustice and uproot every oppression. Some day your sacrifice Out of habit, don't look for the „Like“ button as you finish reading this. Look for liberation. Learn to fight.

Love,
M
